INTRODUCTION

An insurer race toward digitization has put the insurance industry on the verge of a paradigm shift. The pace of change has accelerated thanks to tremendous increases in the volume of electronic data, and the growing power of artificial intelligence. In the early years, companies that digitized were at the forefront of the industry. Today, digitization is required for every level of the competitive landscape. Society's growing reliance on digital technologies is not only reshaping customer expectations but also redefining boundaries across industries. Insurers cannot avoid this phenomenon: as traditional industry borders fall away, the future of insurance stands to be greatly influenced by platforms and ecosystems. Actuaries must familiarize themselves in the new digital era. Hence, theme of this year's Non-life Insurance Forum is "Digital Era for Insurance: The Rise of Platforms"

Non-Life Insurance Forum qualifies for (Actuaries Institute Australia / IFoA / SOA) Continuing Professional Development (CPD).

Adison McKinsey estimated that up to 375 million workers or about 14% of the global workforce would have to change jobs or require new skills as soon as 2030. This similar urgent trend also likely applies to the Insurance industry as a result of technology advancement and swift consumer changing behavior and attitude towards insurance. Therefore, a smart learning management system will become one of the key solutions to help today's insurance workforce effectively deal with the need to tackle the growing skill gap.
